

Accused Student Rights

Students whose conduct is under review based on an alleged violation of the Code of Conduct have the following rights:

- a. Written notice of the charges against them;
- b. To be presumed “not in violation” until found to be “in violation”;
- c. To respond to the evidence and/or present witnesses;
- d. To have access to the Student Code of Conduct;
- e. To have a faculty, staff or student advisor present in cases that may result in suspension or expulsion from the University, but who will only advise the student and not actively participate in the hearing
